

West Chester

Historic Chadds Ford & the Brandywine Valley

Originally inhabited by the Lenni Lenape Indians, Quaker settlers like the Brinton and Gilpin families arrived in the early 1700s. Route 1 (Ye Great Road to Nottingham) began in 1707 as a main route between Baltimore & Chester. First known as Birmingham, the town's name changed to Chadds Ford sometime after John Chads started a fording business to cross the Brandywine Creek in the 1730s.

September 11, 1777 marked the largest land battle of the Revolutionary War when General George Washington and British General Howe met with over 25,000 troops across a 10 square mile area centered at Chadds Ford. Not widely published since Washington lost, the Battle of the Brandywine was a fierce conflict in which the young General Marquis de Lafayette first fought heroically, receiving a gunshot wound to the leg.

Today this bucolic community is known for the Wyeth family painters, equestrian farms, historic homes, Americana museums and world renowned gardens... all nestled in rolling hills along the meandering Brandywine Creek. Drive through the countryside, visit the museums and stop in for a meal at one of the many local establishments... all proud to be part of the Brandywine Valley.
